A “THING” – THE CONCEPT AND DIVISION IN SERBIAN MEDIAEVAL LAW

SRĐAN ŠARKIĆ

A b s t r a c t. – The Serbian mediaeval law of property was concerned essentially with things (res), their acquisition and their transfer. The things (res) were considered as objects and as rights in objects, that had economic value. However, Serbian mediaeval law does not abstractly use the idea of a thing (stvar, ствар in Serbian language). In every case, Serbian legal sources quote and name any single thing that was the object of the transaction.

I

The oldest expression to designate property was dabitak (добићак). Literally, the word means gain, asset, but in the legal documents from 13th and 14th century, the term was primarily understood as cattle, livestock, which was considered the most primitive form of a man’s fortune.¹ Such a concept could be clearly seen in King Dušan’s charter presented to Ragusans (Dubrovčani) concerning the customs of servant² Dabiživ, from 26 October 1345, where the duty on cattle [dabitak] which goes to Dubrovnik (и ћа добитка кои грде 8 Дубровникъ) was mentioned.³ In the same meaning, the word dabitak was used in King Dušan’s charter giving the Church of Saint Nicholas in Vranje to the monastery of Chilandar (1343–1345): And what the cattle graze... (И ћо пас8 добитъкъ...).⁴ The Code of Stephan Dušan in Article 75 says: No district may graze its stock

1 See the article Dobitak (добићак, добић, добићије) by Đ. Tošić, in The Lexicon of Serbian Middle Ages, Beograd 1999, 160–161.

2 Serbian word is sluga (слуга) meaning any servant, but at the Serbian court it was a very prominent courtier in charge of drinks (πιγκέρης at the Byzantine court, regalis pincerna, wine servant). See the article Sluga (Слуга) by R. Mihaljić, in The Lexicon of Serbian Middle within another district (Жоѹпа жоѹпѣ да не попаса добиткомъ ништа).⁵ However, in 13th century documents, dabitak also began to designate the abstract idea of property. For example, when Ragusan doge Johannes Dandulus confirms his friendship with the Serbian King Stephan Vladislav (September 1234 – April 1235), he says that the King can freely enter and leave Dubrovnik (Ragusa) with all his property (ни добыткѣ твоемъ всакомъ; ни добыткомъ имъ; и съ добыткомъ всакымъ твоимъ и шнѣхъ добыткомъ всакимъ; Я добиткѣ ере смо рекли дати...).⁶ In the treaty from 1282, King Stephan Uroš II Milutin says that the Ragusans (Dubrovčani) can leave [Serbia if they do something wrong to the King] within three months with all their property (... да имъ есть рокъ за три мѣсце да си иզдоутъ съ всѣмъ своимъ добыткомъ).⁷ King Stephan Uroš I says, in the treaty from 23 August 1254, that if any Ragusan won a suit with a Serbian let my judges deliver him his property (... да мѣ моє съдьце издаю добыткѣ).⁸

In several cases Serbian legal sources differentiate between živi dobitak, literally live gain, live asset, i.e. cattle, livestock, and mrtvi dobitak (и добытка живога и мр’твога), literally dead or inanimate gain, i.e. the immovable things.⁹ Tsar Dušan in his charter presented to the monastery of Chilandar (1348) says that he gave the tenth part of „live gain“ (i.e. cattle, livestock) to the monastery, that was in money terms four hundred perpers¹⁰ (И приложисмо отъ всега добитка живога, што се находитъ оу царства ми, десетъкъ всако годиште ... да си оузымаю за тъ десетъкъ всако годиште на Гюргевъ дънь лѣтній оу Новомъ Ерѣдѣ сребра за четири тисоушта крестатиихъ перперъ).¹¹ However, the Article 144 of Dušan’s Code the whole property of an individual calls his house and his cattle (на њисовоу коукю и на єговъ добиткѣ), where the word kuća (lit. house) could designate immovable property, and dabitak all movable things, not only cattle.¹²

The term which most frequently designates the whole property is imenije or imanije = property, holding, estate, homestead (from verb imeti or imati = to have). In Serbian legal documents imanije, as the object of property rights is often opposed to the glava (lit. head), as the subject of legal acts (natural person, individual).¹³ That is clear from two treaties of Serbian monarchs with Dubrovnik (1349 and 1357) where the same formula has been repeated: And that they [Ragusans] circulate within my Empire with their heads [as individuals] and their property... freely, without any disturbance¹⁴ (Да греде своими главами, иманикъмъ своимъ... свободно, безъ (всаке) забавѣ по земли царства ми).¹⁵ Dušan’s Law Code uses the term imanije as well, designating the whole property (all movable and immovable things). Article 70, regulating the division of family estate, mentions brothers or father or sons, or any other, independent by bread or property (или братен’ци, или отъца отъ сыновъ, или инь кто одельны хлѣбомъ и иманіемъ).¹⁶

II

Roman law had a very detailed division of things,¹⁷ but among the sources of the Serbian mediaeval law, only one fragment in the Syntagma of Matheas Blastares mentions the Roman division on res mobiles and res imobiles (movable and immovable things). The text is an interpretation of Justinian’s Novella CXXXI, 13, which forbids to bishops who had acquired movable or immovable property after ordination for a bishop, to transfer them to their relatives (Отрицајемъ, рече, прѣподобнѣшиимъ епископомъ таже по епископствѣ тѣмъ которимъ любо образомъ пришьдша имѣниа, движима или недвижима, въ своје съродники или къ инымъ, которимъ любо образомъ прѣносити...).¹⁸ However, in the original Greek text of Justinian’s Novella and Syntagma of Matheas Blastares, beside the division on movable and immovable things (πράγματα κινητὰ ἢ ἀκίνητα) we can find the idea of selfmovable (αὐτοκίνητα) things, which was omitted in the Serbian translation.¹⁹ Although the Serbian translators of Syntagma omitted to mention selfmovable things, they were present in Serbian legal sources as živi dobitak (live gain, live asset, i.e. cattle, livestock). That is clear from the beginning of the article 117 of Dušan’s Law Code: *If anything come to any man in the Tsar’s realm out of some city or other district which belonged to some other lord before the Tsar took that land or county... (Шо јест комој прѣшло оуц царевој земљу или изъ града, или изъ жоупѣ кок до прїетїа господина цара додгдѣ нѣст било царево нѣ јест било иога господара).*²⁰

14 Serbian word is zabava (забава) meaning in modern Serbian language amusement, entertainment. However, in mediaeval Serbian legal documents zabava means disturbance, interference, nuisance. See the article Zabava (Забава) by S. Bojanin in The Lexicon of Serbian Middle Ages, 201.

Among other, Roman law knew for the division of things vested in private ownership (res in nostro patrimonio) and things not owned privately (res extra nostrum patrimonium).²¹ Aelius Marcianus, a Roman lawyer of the early 3rd century AD, used for res in nostro patrimonio and res extra nostrum patrimonium the expressions res in commercio (things in trade) and res extra commercium (things out of trade)²² and his terminology prevailed in modern law. In Serbian mediaeval law we can not find such a division, but the legal documents mention some objects that could be res in commercio. Those objects were mostly churches, built by the natural persons (individuals) – noblemen and clergy, who were landlords and had hereditary estate (baština)²³ over their manors. Churches on private estates were the property of their owners and could be things in trade (res in commercio). We shall quote several examples.

In the chrysoboule presented to the monastery of Saint Archangels Michael and Gabriel near the city of Prizren (1348), Tsar Stephan Dušan confirms that the church built on the manor of nobleman family Vladojević was their hereditary estate (да си дръже въ тъкто сегаzi оғ бащиноғ). As the church was hereditary estate (baština) it could be the object of trade (res in commercio). So the Tsar, with the consent of Mladen Vladojević and his mother, not by force, changed the church for another church (И симъ вѣраюъ ѧмѣнихъ цркви Спаса оғ Младѣна Владојевиќа и оғ матерє ико ... ниҳ воломъ и ниҳъ хотѣниемъ, а не нѣкою ноѹждею, ѧмѣнихъ и дахъ ѧмѣноғ оғ Охридѣ ии' дричю цркви за цркви).²⁴ Tsar Stephan Dušan bought a place called Livade and the church of Saint Nicholas on peninsula Athos and gave them as a present to the monastery of Chilandar (1 December 1347).²⁵ In the Tsar Stephan Dušan's charter to the lesser lord²⁶ Ivanko Probištitović (28 May 1350), Serbian monarch says that Ivanko can freely dispose with the church of Saint John that he built on his estate. Ivanko and his children can sell the church, give it as a present or give it for the soul,²⁷ as they wish (ѡнѹзи цркви кою си кѣсть създалъ Светаго Ивана ... да си има и дръжи Иванко и негова дѣца до вѣка въ всако 8твръждение и достоиние царско и свободѣ чист8. Како всак8 к8пениц8 люби за д8ш8 подъ цркви записати, люби ком8 харизати к8де м8 кѣсть хотѣниe).²⁸

21 Modo videamus de rebus; quae vel in nostro patrimonio sunt vel extra nostrum patrimonium habentur (Gaius, Inst. II, 1; Iust. Inst. II, 1, 1 praef.).

22 D. XX, 3, 2.

23 The expression baština (баштина, бащина) comes from the old Slavonic word bašta (баща) = father, and indicates the hereditary estate (očevina), with reference to the real estate which passes from father to the heirs of his body (analogous to the Latin term patrimonium = father, as well). Lord who was hereditary estate holder, could freely consume his property. See the article Baština (Баштина) by R. Mihaljčić and S. Ćirković, in The Lexicon of Serbian Middle Ages, 31–33.

25 Новаковић, Законски сноменици, 417.

26 Serbian word vlasteličić is a patronymic, a name derived from the name of a father or ancestor („a son of a small lord“ – vlastelin).

In Dubrovnik the word has been translated as zentilotto. In the Greek charters, issued by Serbian rulers, vlastela (noblemen) are called ἄρχοντες and vlasteličići (lesser lords) ἄρχοντόποιλοι. Lesser lords (vlasteličići) were relatively numerous class of military nobles and they might have come from „soldiers“, mentioned in the sources from the beginning of the thirteenth century. See the article Vlasteličići (Властеличићи) by R. Mihaljčić, in The Lexicon of Serbian Middle Ages, 91–92.

27 The formula „given for the soul“ (за дѹшоғ өдати) in Serbian mediaeval law, corresponds to the capacity to make a will. See S. Šarkić, The Concept of the Will in Roman, Byzantine and Serbian Medieval Law, Forschungen zur byzantinischen Rechtsgeschichte, Fontes minores XI, herausgegeben von L. Burgmann, Frankfurt am Main 2005, 430.

It seems that Serbian mediaeval law recognized the division between the res corporales (physical, corporeal things), i.e. tangible objects and res incorporales (non-physical, incorporeal things), i.e. right to which an economic value attaches.²⁹ Testimony could be found in several documents. In the charter presented to the Saint George’s monastery near the city of Skoplje (1300), King Stephan Uroš II Milutin says that he gave to the monastery village Kozarevo and the monastery of Saint John Chrysostom and Barovo and Vinsko with all hamlets, vineyards, fields, watermills and beast and fish-hunting grounds, with enclosures³⁰ and mountains and all the rights of those villages (И приложи краљевство ми село Козареву ... а въ неко манастир Светы Іванъ Златоустыи съ Баровомъ и съ Винскомъ и съ всѣми заселки тѣми и съ Златоустуани, съ виногради, съ нивикъмъ, съ водѣничиемъ, и съ ловищемъ рибнимъ и звѣрнимъ, съ забѣли и съ планиномъ и съ всѣми правинами сель тѣхъ). Few words further King adds that he gave to the Saint George’s monastery village of Čereševljani as well, with all its property and all its rights (...и съ всѣми правинами).³¹ King Dušan’s charter presented to the monastery of Treskavac (1335), testifies that object of trade was the church of Saint Nicholas in [village of] Hlerine, sold by Vlach’s bishop, with all men, vineyards, fields, watermills and with all regions and rights (Црква оу Хлеринѣ светии Никола, што продаде влашьки пискоупъ, съ людьми, и съ виногради, и съ нивикъмъ и съ водѣничиемъ, и съ въсю облостию и правинами).³² Almost the same words were used in the Tsar Stephan Dušan’s charter issued in favour of Karyes (Καρυές) Kellion in Holy Mountain (1348): beside the phisical things Tsar said that he gave all rights that village of Kosoriće disposed (...и съ въсеми правинами села того).³³

The expression и съ всѣми правинами (and with all rights) was the translation of Greek terms μετά τῶν δικαίων καὶ προνόμιων (with all rights and privileges) usual in Byzantine charters³⁴ and adopted by composers of Serbian legal Corporales haec sunt quae tangi possunt, velut fundus homo vestis aurum argentum et denique aliae res innumerabilis. Incorporales sunt quae tangi non possunt, qualia sunt ea quae iure consistunt, sicut hereditas, ususfructus, obligationes quoquo modo contractae“ (Again, things are either corporeal or incorporeal. Things corporeal are tangible, as land, a slave, clothing, gold, silver, and innumerable others. Iust. Inst. II, 2,1–2 (De rebus incorporalibus).

30 Serbian word is zabel (забел), which is no more used in modern language. See the article Zabel (Забел) by M. Blagojević, in The Lexicon of Serbian Middle Ages, 202.

archives of the Chilandar monastery: 1) June 1199, Byzantine emperor Alexios III Angel confirms to the Serbian monk Sabba the property over the monastery of Chilandar καὶ τὸν ὄλων τούτου δικαίων καὶ προνομίων; 2) September 1265, John, Constantine and Michael Spartenos confirm the gifts to the monastery of Chilandar, done by their father καὶ τοῖς αὐτῶν δικαίους καὶ προνομίους; 3) December 1304, Demetrios Philanthropenos cedes his goods Korakome and tou Blachou in Holmyros, to the painter Michael Proeleusis, who has to build one monydrion dedicated to the Mother of God, καὶ πάντων τῶν δικαίων καὶ προνομίων αὐτῆς; 4) August 5, 1314, Demetrios Pyrrhos, his son-in-law and his son sell two plots of the vineyard in Ropalaia to the monastery of Chilandar with πάντων δικαίων καὶ προνομίων; 5) Theodore Mallokopos and his son sell two plots of the vineyard in Ropalaia to the monastery of Chilandar ὡν ἔχουσι πάντων δικαίων καὶ προνομίων. acts.³⁵ This fact was already noticed by Russian scholar F. Zigelj, although he thought that the expression i s vsemi pravinami does not mean with all rights, rather with all accessory things (accessorium, res accessoria), that which belong to the principal thing (res principale).³⁶

Serbian legal sources make clear difference between the principal thing (res principale) and the accessory thing (accessorium), that which belongs to a principal thing, or is in connection with it.³⁷ As the principal thing the sources usually indicate a village and beside it different accessory things were quoted (see above mentioned examples). In some documents as the principal thing appears the mountain. For example, in the chrysoboule presented to the monastery of Žiča (1219–1220), King Stephan the First Crowned says that he gave to the church mountains (long list with the name of mountains) with all pastures for use in summertime and wintertime (И се планине ... съ всѣми пашами землини и лѣтнини).³⁸ In the King Stephan Dušan's chrysoboule, confirming the gifts of his noblemen Hrelja to the monastery of Chilandar (6 May 1332), mountains Ograždeno and Draguljevo with all fields at the foot [of mountains] and with all districts, were mentioned (И планина Ограждено и Драгулево и подъпланинъ съ всею властию).³⁹ However, in the charter of Tsar Stephan Uroš issued in favour of Ragusans (25 April 1357) we read a general formula: Tsar gave them a land and everything that could be found on it (даде имъ царство ми и записа и дарова землю ... и все що се обрѣта на тоизи земли, да си има и држки градъ Дубровникъ).⁴⁰

(June 1321), recognizing immunity rights of the monastery of Saint Nicholas in Kamenikaia near Serres, founded by hieromonach Theodossios Mellissenos, we can find formula: ...ἀλλὰ δὲ καὶ ἔτερων πάντων δικαίου καὶ προνομίου. 2) August 1321, the nun Marina sells his property, situated in the city of Kaisaropolis, valuable 210 perpers, to the monks of the monastery of Chilandar, using the words: μετὰ πάντων αὐτοῦ φημὶ τῶν δικαίου καὶ προνομίου παλαιῶν τέ καὶ νέων; 3) September 1365, Byzantine emperor John V Palaiologos, on demand of Serbian emperor Stephan Uroš, offers the village of Potolino with the neighboring lands to the monks of Chilandar μεθ' ὧν ἔχει δικαίου καὶ προνομίου. point of view Taranovski quoted King Stephan Uroš's chrysoboule to the monastery of Saint Apostles Peter and Paul on the river Lim (1254–1263), where the word pravine was replaced with pravila (rules): Яще ли кто никакда въ никакв време нараженыемъ и зависишиу диаволею коимъ шврацомъ въсхошеть поработыти светоу цркви и пратворити праданыя тьномъ, или въ селахъ или въ планынахъ, или въ Владислахъ, или въ Довитицахъ, или въ Кобилахъ, или въ Земли и въ Биоградахъ, правилахъ црквицахъ... Taranovski used the edition of S. Стварно право у средњовековној Србији заснивало се на појму ствари, начинима њиховог стицања и отуђења. Али, како у то време није постојала научна обрада права, у изворима не налазимо апстрактни појам ствари, већ се у сваком посебном случају именује ствар која је била предмет правног промета.

Најстарији израз који се користи да би означио скуп ствари који сачињавају имовину је добитак. У текстовима из XIII и XIV века, добитак означава пре свега стоку, као најпримитивнији облик људског богатства, мада у неким изворима и имовину уопште. Неки документи праве разлику између живој добитка, што представља стоку и мртвој добитка, који означава непокретне ствари. Најчешћи израз који се користи за појам имовине је иманије или именије. Иманије, као објекат стварних права се у текстовима противставља глави, као субјекту својинских права.

Од врло детаљне поделе ствари које познаје римско право у средњовековном српском праву налазимо само један фрагмент у Синтагми Матије Властара који помиње поделу на покретне и непокретне ствари (res mobiles, res immobiles). Ради се о тумачењу једне Јустинијанове Новеле која поред покретних и непокретних ствари (πράγματα κινητὰ ἢ ἀκίνητα), познаје и такозване самојокрејне ствари (αὐτοκίνητα). Међутим, у српском преводу самојокрејне ствари су изостављене.

Остале поделе ствари, које познаје римско право, се изричito не помињу, али анализа извора нам дозвољава да закључимо да је средњовековно српско право познавало ствари у промету (res in commercio), телесне и бестелесне ствари (res corporales, res incorporales) и правило разлику између главне ствари и припадка (res principale, accessorium). Највише примера налазимо за појам бестелесних ствари, односно одређених права. Приликом стицања непокретности у документима се често истиче да ће нови власник моћи да ужива ствар са „свим правима“ (и с въсеми правинами). Израз и с въсеми правинами представља превод византијске формуле μετὰ τῶν δικαιῶν καὶ πρόνομιῶν, који се најчешће среће у хиландарским актима.
